Forum:
Financial Globalization and Transitions

Join the organizers of Harriman Institute’s 2014-15 Core Project, Learning from Transition: from the Local to the Global, for an open forum on “Financial Globalization and Transitions.”

A distinguished panel of experts, including the world’s leading scholars and practitioners will explore the consequences of financial globalization for transition economies in Eastern Europe and around the world.

The forum is part of this year’s Core Project, which aims to unpack assumptions about the path of political, social and economic reforms in the region by critically examining the conditions for scalability and portability of institutions. The Core Project is co-directed by Katharina Pistor and David Stark.

Panelists:

Erik Berglof, London School of Economics and Political Science

Karen Dawisha, Miami University

Daniela Gabor, University of West England, Bristol

Yasheng Huang, Massachusetts Institute of Technology

Jonathan Kirshner, Cornell University

Thomas Pepinsky, Cornell University

Dennis Quinn, Georgetown University

Martin Rapetti, University of Buenos Aires

Sergio Schmukler, World Bank
