

Carnegie/Harriman Research Grants
for Ph.D. Students in the Social Sciences

Thanks to generous support from the Carnegie Corporation of New York, the Harriman Institute of Columbia University announces a competition for grants of up to $12,000 for Ph.D. candidates in the social sciences who are conducting research on Russia. These grants are designed to improve research and training of Ph. D. students whose dissertation includes a focus on Russia. Research grants may support training, data collections, dissertation research, or projects unrelated to the dissertation. Projects that involve some form of collaboration with scholars based in Russia will receive special attention, although this is not a condition of receiving the grant.

Candidates should submit a 10-page research proposal, a curriculum vitae, and a one-page budget outlining their research project to Ryan Kreider at rk2780@columbia.edu

Two letters of recommendation (including one from the student's dissertation adviser) should be sent under separate cover to the same address.

Applications should be received by February 21, 2018 and grantees will be notified by February 28.

For grantees outside of Columbia University, these grants will be subject to taxation.

Funds should be expended by September 15, 2018. There may be opportunities for extension, but extensions cannot be guaranteed.

Grantees should prepare a 5-page report detailing how the funds were spent. This report would be due by October 15.
