

Myroslava Gongadze is the Eastern Europe Chief at Voice of America (as of December 2021). A tireless campaigner for human rights and international media freedoms, Ms. Gongadze has been instrumental in modeling democratic media norms and helping Ukrainians better understand US policy towards their country. She was granted political asylum in the United States in 2001 following the murder of her husband, high-profile investigative journalist Georgy Gongadze. In addition to her work at Voice of America (until recently, Head of the Ukrainian Service), Gongadze is often invited to speak as a subject matter expert in various forums discussing politics, democratization, and media in Ukraine. She periodically contributes to NPR and her writings have been published in the Wall Street Journal, Washington Post, NPR, and the Journal of Democracy. In 2018-2019 Myroslava completed her study at Harvard University as a Nieman fellow. In addition, she completed the Reagan-Fascell Democracy Fellowship at NED (2001) and the Petrak Foundation Scholarship at George Washington University (2003). Also in 2014, Gongadze received the Princess Olha Order, a Ukrainian civil decoration bestowed on women of outstanding personal merit, for her contribution to the development of journalism, active civic stance, and professional excellence.
