

Dušan Radunović is Associate Professor in the School of Modern Languages and Cultures at Durham, where he teaches Russian social and cultural history and film studies. He is the author of a monographs on the genesis of the concept of form in the twentieth-century Russian humanities (forthcoming) and on Mikhail Bakhtin (in Serbo-Croat, 2012) and co-editor of the volume Language, Ideology, and the Human: New Interventions (Routledge, 2012). His monograph on the concept of form in twentieth-century Russian humanities is being prepared for publication.