

Evgeniia (Eva) Ivanilova is a PhD candidate in Slavic and Film & Media Studies at the University of Pittsburgh. Her work focuses on the late modern period, subject formation, affective control, and cinema. Her dissertation in progress examines the psychocultural effects of globalization and post-socialism, specifically what happens to individual and collective subjectivities amid accelerating fragmentation and the normalization of atomized existence. She approaches these questions by studying visual texts and mediascapes that emerged in Russia from the 1990s to the 2020s.
