

Natalia Plagmann is a scholar of contemporary Russian and East European culture with a focus on documentary modes in cinema, theater, and literature. She holds a Ph.D. in Slavic Languages and Cultures from Princeton and currently is teaching in the Russian Department at Middlebury College. Natalia's current book project explores documentary films and theatrical productions in Russia in the 1990s-2010s. Her broader research interests include Soviet and post-Soviet visual art, media, and performance studies. Her work has been published in the Russian Review, Slavic Review, NLO, as well as in an edited volume Women in Soviet Cinema.